

THURSDAY, JULY 29TH

HOME NEWS ABOUT WRITING DISTRIBUTION CONTACT

search...

NEWS BUSINESS SPORTS POLITICS ENTERTAINMENT SCI & HEALTH LIFESTYLE TECHNOLOGY

BREAKING NEWS: Cubs manager Lou Piniella to retire

You are here: Home » News »

Insurance Companies Profit From Fallen Soldiers' Funds

JULY 29, 2010 2:40 PM 0 COMMENTS

With these "retained-asset accounts," instead of writing a check for a lump sum, insurers send beneficiaries something that resembles a checkbook and assures them that the money is in a secure, interest-earning account.

In reality, according to Bloomberg, the insurer holds onto the funds and uses them to earn investment income. Prudential, for instance, earned a 4.8 percent return on such funds in 2008, while paying beneficiaries far less interest. Here's Bloomberg:

Both MetLife, which handles insurance for nonmilitary federal employees, and Prudential paid 0.5 percent interest in July to survivors of government workers and soldiers. That's less than half of the rate available at some banks with accounts insured by the FDIC up to $250,000.

What's more, the "checks" aren't always accepted because the process for retailers to receive reimbursement is more complicated—the money isn't pulled directly from a bank account because it needs to first be transferred from the insurer.

Though some states are looking into the matter, few states have rules on retained-asset accounts, and the Office of Veterans Affairs—which pays Prudential for life insurance for soldiers—has allowed the practice, according to Bloomberg.

Prudential, however, said it made the proper disclosures and argued that the retained-asset accounts are helpful for families.

"For some families, the account is the difference between earning interest on a large amount of money and letting it sit idle," spokesman Bob DeFillippo told Bloomberg.

Government workers should also beware. The practice extends beyond the military, according to Bloomberg.

"They've kind of created a sort of shadow banking system," said David Evans, author of the Bloomberg piece, in an interview available online. "There are now a million of these accounts that hold $28 billion of money that would've been paid out in the old days to survivors, and is now being held as a profit center for the life insurers."

Read the original article here.

LEAVE A REPLY

Name (required)

E-Mail (will not be published) (required)

Website

Income Annuity Rates Now

- High Yielding Annuities to Compare
- Choose to Retire with Confidence

Annuity-Rates.2Insure4Less.com

2Insure4Less.com

Annuity-Rates.2Insure4Less.com Arts by Granite

LATEST NEWS

- 2 mins ago
Media Advisory: BMO Capital Markets to Host Annual 2010 Fixed Income Perspectives Conference
- 13 mins ago
Barack Obama on The View
- 22 mins ago
Ashes of Chicago Woman Lost in Mail
- 26 mins ago
Tinley Park Rejects County Red-Light Cam
- 26 mins ago
Insurance Companies Profit From Fallen Soldiers' Funds
- 30 mins ago
Murdoch seeks $600,000 from White House for news service
- 42 mins ago
Metra Needs Watchdog, Officials Agree
- 47 mins ago
Chicago-Area Residents Living Greener
- 47 mins ago
CPS Asks Teachers for New Concessions
- 48 mins ago
Phinney to ride for Armstrong's RadioShack team

ENTERTAINMENT , NEWS

Barack Obama on The View

President Barack Obama appears on ABC's The View, with co-hosts from left, Whoopi Goldberg, Barbara Walters, Joy Behar, Sherri Shepherd and Elisabeth Hasselbeck.

Photograph: Steve Fenn/AP
Preamble: If you've got an American history book, throw it away, it's useless. Future chronicles...

READ MORE →

NEWS

Ashes of Chicago Woman Lost in Mail

Chicago – The ashes of Mabel Bink, 89, a Chicago woman who died last month in Arizona, have gotten lost in the mail. The Chicago Tribune reports that the package containing an urn with her ashes was supposed to arrive in Chicago by July 19, in time for her burial on July 23. At last check,...

READ MORE →

NEWS

Tinley Park Rejects County Red-Light Cam

Updated: Thursday, 29 Jul 2010, 9:14 AM CDT
Published: Thursday, 29 Jul 2010, 9:14 AM CDT
FOX Chicago News
Chicago – Village trustees in southwest suburban Tinley Park have voted to opt out of a Cook County plan to install a red-light camera. Tinley Park has three red-light cameras of its own,...

READ MORE →

NEWS

Insurance Companies Profit From Fallen Soldiers' Funds

With these "retained-asset accounts," instead of writing a check for a lump sum, insurers send beneficiaries something that resembles a checkbook and assures them that the money is in a secure, interest-earning account. In reality, according to Bloomberg, the insurer holds onto the funds and uses...

READ MORE →

NEWS

Murdoch seeks $600,000 from White House for news service

It looks as though Rupert Murdoch has finally found a way to make the White House pay — literally. The Wall Street Journal has raised the rate it charges the administration's news clipping service by a jaw-dropping $800,000 (£384,000) per year. "Obviously, we're not paying"....

READ MORE →